

This project involved substantial renovations to a 1920's Californian Bungalow. The shell of the existing single level house was retained and a new upper level comprising four bedrooms and two bathrooms was added.

The traditional features of the original house were retained and the new modern additions were carefully knitted into the fabric of the existing house to create a seamless transition between old and new.

Photographer: Craig Bryant